

Abstract

A method and apparatus of driving a plasma display panel that is adaptive for making a stable operation at a low temperature. In the method, a first driving waveform is applied to sub-fields at a temperature more than a low temperature. A second driving waveform different from the first driving waveform is supplied to the sub-fields at the low temperature.